

303rd BG (H) Combat Mission No. 75

8 Oct 1943

Target: Center of City, Bremen, Germany

Crews Dispatched: 21

Length of Mission: 5 hours, 45 minutes

Bomb Load: 42 x 65 lb M47A2 Incendiary bombs

Bombing Altitude: 28,900 ft

Ammo Fired: 9,700 rounds

Black Week - 8-14 Oct 1943

The primary target was the important submarine-building yard at Bremen. During 1942, this yard produced 10.6% of total German production. On 8 October, there were 21 submarines under construction and 10 being fitted out. There were also four "Seetier" class destroyers being constructed and two being fitted out. The yard capacity had recently been increased by one slip. Another plant in Bremen was producing 75 JU-87 aircraft each month. The secondary target was the center of the city of Bremen.

Aircraft #41-24577 Hell's Angels turned back at the English coast when the pilot, Lt. John R. Johnston 358th BS, lost his No. 1 engine.

The effectiveness of the target smoke screen, in combination with a haze that extended to altitude, caused the Group to attack the secondary target. Twenty-seven tons of M47A1 65-lb. incendiary bombs were dropped from 28,000 feet and appeared to have landed east of the aiming point.

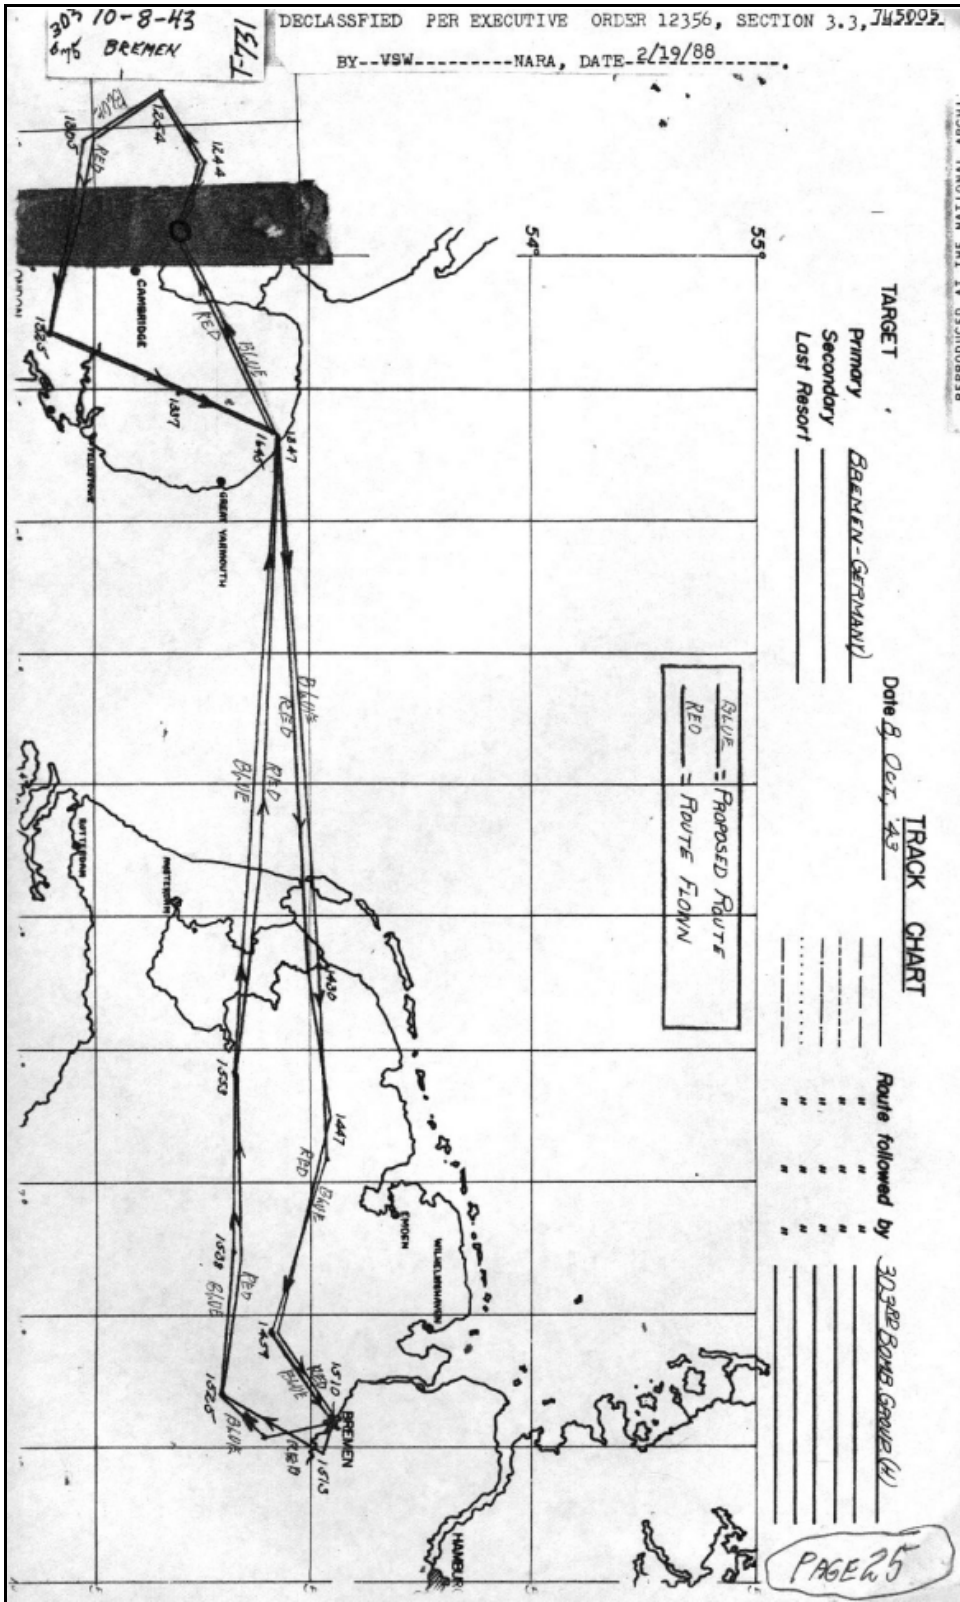

Flak in the target area was intense and accurate for Groups below the 303rd BG(H) formation. Both barrage and continuously pointed fire were employed. Meager inaccurate flak was met at various points to and from the target. Up to 300 enemy aircraft were seen, but there were very few attacks by the ME-109s, ME-110s and FW-190s. There were no claims made by the Group, no aircraft lost and no casualties. Nine aircraft suffered minor flak damage. Fighter support was good.

The lead pilot, Capt. Casello reported, "My crew saw bombs hitting on the center of town. There was a lot of flak, but the P-47s kept the enemy fighters away most of the time. We had a few tail attacks, but they didn't damage the ship any." "They definitely haven't taken any flak away from Bremen." added Maj. Shayler. "We were lucky enough to fly above most of it, but it must have been hell for the boys flying below us. The flak was bursting fiercely down there. However, we weren't bothered much by fighters. They didn't seem to want to come up to our altitude and mix with the P-47s."

S/Sgt. Virgil E. Brown, tail gunner on Sky Wolf, said he saw three FW-190s attack one Fortress when the P-47s weren't around. "That tail gunner was really on the ball. He shot down two of the FWs in about thirty seconds and the other one turned around and got out of there fast," Sgt. Brown reported. S/Sgt. Chester Petrosky, tail gunner on Miss Bea Haven said, "I've never seen flak as thick as it was today. It looked like we could have gotten out and walked on it."

The crew of Star Dust 358BS, had the roughest Group trip of the day. Over the target flak hit the ship, damaged a supercharger and caused a runaway propeller. Flying on three engines, Star Dust fell behind the rest of the formation, but went on to bomb the target. Two bombs stuck in the racks and the bomb bay doors refused to close, slowing the ship down even more. To complicate matters, oxygen masks froze at the sub-zero altitude. Bombardier Lt. Phillip A. Reed passed out from lack of oxygen. Engineer T/Sgt. Joseph A. Rozek went back to the bomb bay to try to close the doors and increase the speed of the ship a little. He dislodged the two bombs, which rolled out of the partially closed doors. Then Sgt. Rozek passed out on the narrow catwalk over the open bomb bay doors five miles above earth. Seeing Sgt. Rozek's position, 2Lt. Roy C. Sanders, pilot of Star Dust, left the controls in the hands of the co-pilot 2Lt. Henry F. Nogash. After dragging Sgt. Rozek to a safer spot and fitting him up with an emergency oxygen system, Lt. Sanders went to the nose and succeeded in reviving Lt. Reed. "We were lucky to get back," the crew agreed. "We weren't in very good shape to keep off fighters, but those P-47s were all around us. Boy! They really looked good—as welcome as a letter from home."
