303rd BG (H) Combat Mission No. 126

March 23, 1944

Target: Railroad Marshalling Yards, Hamm, Germany & City area, Ahlem, Germany

Crews Dispatched: 27

Length of Mission: 6 hours, 15 minutes

Bomb Load: 12 x 500 lb G.P. & 42 x 65 lb M47A1 bombs

Bombing Altitude: 20,000 ft & 21,200 ft Ammo Fired: 3,180 rounds

wenty-eight aircraft, including one spare, took off to attack the primary target, the airdrome at Gutersloh, Germany. The secondary target was the city of Munster; and the last resort was any industrial target in Germany that could be bombed without disrupting the fighter support. Twenty-one flew as the lead Group in the 41st Composite CBW. The remaining seven flew as the High Group, high Squadron of the 41 CBW.

The weather over Germany was 8/10 undercast. The 303BG-A could not bomb the primary or secondary targets because of the cloud conditions. They bombed a last resort target through a large break in the clouds. The 359BS formation bombed a secondary target containing enough cloud holes to find check points.

The spare aircraft returned as ordered. No other aircraft returned early. Twenty B-17s of the main 303BG-A dropped 240 500-lb. M43 bombs on Hamm from 20,000 feet, the target of opportunity, with good results. The aiming points were a river bridge and railroad marshalling yards. The 359BS dropped 294 65-lb. M47A1 incendiary bombs on Ahlen, Germany from 21,200 feet with poor results.

Only seven aircraft saw one to five enemy aircraft. There were no attacks on the Group. Flak was meager and inaccurate over Hamm and moderate to intense and accurate at Ahlen. Meager inaccurate flak was encountered at several other points. Six aircraft sustained flak damage, two major and four minor. Chaff was dropped, but results could not be determined. Fighter support was excellent.

Lt. Col. William Calhoun, flying his 31st mission said, "It was one of the easiest of my missions. There were no enemy fighters and most of the flak was way off. We bombed a railroad marshalling yard and a bridge at Hamm and did pretty good. We hit the bridge and broke it and most of the rest of the bombs hit the neck of the marshalling yards. I think things will be tied up there for awhile. We had plenty of fighter support covering the whole mission. The German fighters could have come up, but they didn't. I don't know why." Major Cole, flying as co-pilot in the lead ship, said, "On the whole it was an easier day's work than usual. There were no enemy fighters at all. More or less of a milk run for us."

1Lt. Keith Clapp, the bombardier said, "I watched the bombs go down and they hit in a nice compact pattern. I could see them hit two bridges and in the railroad marshalling yards and factory area nearby." Other Groups were doing well, too, according to 2Lt.

Charles W. Mars, pilot of the Fortress Tennessee Hillbilly, who said, "I don't know what the group ahead hit, but they really hit something near Hamm. When we passed, the smoke was already coming up to 3,000 feet and getting higher."

From the Journal of 1Lt Vern L. Moncur

MISSION #22
Date: March 23, 1944
Target: Hamm, Germany
Altitude: 20,000 feet
Plane: U-050 "Thunderbird"

Position: No. 3, Lead Squadron, Lead Group

We flew on Colonel Calhoun's wing on this mission. Our group was supposed to bomb Munster, but clouds prevented us from doing so. The railroad yards at Hamm, Germany were just as important and were listed as our secondary target. Therefore, we made a bomb run on Hamm and had excellent results. The trip was very successful and we got along fine. It seemed good to get a fairly short trip for a change. This mission was only six hours and ten minutes long.

We got a hole in each wing and one in the vertical stabilizer. We had no fighter opposition, but the flak was pretty rough over the target. There was no injury to any of the crew, but the plane received some battle damage. We were carrying 12 five-hundred pound high explosive bombs.

A flak hit knocked off the entire tail gunner compartment on #42-32037 (No Name) 358BS, which was piloted by Lt. Raymond Hoffman. The Tail Gunner, Sgt. James O. Williams, was killed. His body was recovered the next day at Hamm.

IT HAPPENED-TO MEN I FLEW WITH

from the Diary of Lt. Carroll 'Ted' Binder

I don't know the kid very well, as I haven't been flying with Ray's (2Lt Raymond Hofmann) crew lately. But I've really got to hand it to him. He was making his first mission with the Squadron when it happened. We were on our bomb run on a town in western Germany when the flak boys got hot, making every burst count. There was a crashing sound in the back of his plane, and when the waist gunners (Sgt. David I. Miller and Sgt Bernard J. Hendin) looked around, the tail compartment wasn't there any more. They found a "knee-cap" up by the radio room.

Though half of his controls were shot out, Ray managed to keep in formation, staying with the Group until he reached the comparative safety of the North Sea, then bringing the plane home alone. Williams (Sgt. James O. Williams-KIA) had never known what hit him, but to the rest of the crew it had been a great shock. It must have taken real courage for Hendin to volunteer to take over the tail position for the crew. He made the offer as soon as the crew left the aircraft and he's been back there ever since. His picture, along with Berman's (S/Sgt Seymour Berman, Radio Operator) and Blakeney's (S/Sgt William R. Blakeney, Jr, Engineer) appeared in a lot of American papers standing beside the shot-off tail.

(Editor's note: This crew was not too lucky! Lt. Hofmann and his crew were shot up badly on Mission #140 and had to fly to Switzerland. Flying with him were Sergeants Blakeney, Crenshaw, and Berman. Lt. Brothers only finished 19 missions with his last being #135. We have no indication of why. Lt. Levy became a POW on mission #139. Sgt. David I. Miller's last mission was on #139 but we do not know why that was his last mission. Lt. Spatt finished his tour at mission #159. Sergeant Hendin continued to fly through mission #137 and then didn't fly again until missions numbers 159, 179 and 181.)

CON TRAILS AND INTENSE FLAK

23 March 1944 — Mission #126 Ed Miller's Memories and Recollections

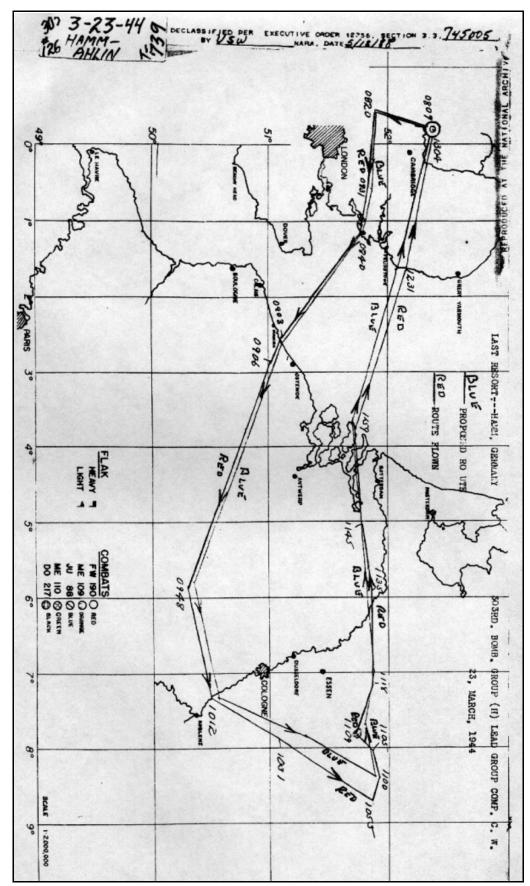

Somehow we always get assigned to a Composite Group, and today we will be flying the High Squadron of the 41st Combat Wing's Composite Group. The mission for the 303rd crew members was very easy, but for the wings that attacked Brunswick it was a horrible day. They lost 10 B-17s to enemy aircraft, while we saw only two aircraft at a distance.

But we struggled for 30 minutes with our bomb bay doors open at 21,000 feet as we made two passes at the railway concentrations at Ahlen, Germany. Finally, our target was observed visually and bomb were dropped. Reports indicated that the results were pretty good, both from our Composite Group and the 303rd A formation.

But the flak over Ahlen was "intense and accurate" as four of our six ship squadron were damaged, two of them in a major way.

For the 8th Air Force, which put up 768 bombers, we lost 22 B-17s and 6 B-24s. Our "little friends" provided very good cover today, but we lost four of them.

The worst "con trails" that we had ever seen were encountered today, as we climbed between 18,000 and 20,000 feet over Holland and moved into Germany. They were so dense and persistent that we had trouble flying formation, being hardly able to see the aircraft that we were guiding on. But compared to the previous 5 or 6 missions, six hours and 15 minutes was a snap.
