303rd BG (H) Combat Mission No. 132

9 April 1944

Target: Focke-Wolf Aircraft Factory & Airdrome, Marienburg, Germany

Crews Dispatched: 40

Crews Lost: Lt. McGarry, Jr., 6 KIA, 4 wounded Length of Mission: 11 hours, 38 minutes Bomb Load: 10 x 500 lb M64 G.P. bombs

Bombing Altitude: A - 15,000 ft; B - 17,000 ft Ammo Fired: 21,940 rounds

orty scheduled B-17s were airborne. Spirit of Flak Wolf, 427BS, piloted by 1Lt. John J. McGarry, Jr., crashed shortly after takeoff, about 2 1/2 miles from the end of the runway. Because of its heavy gas and bomb load, it could not gain sufficient altitude and hit a tree while taking off. Its tail part of the stabilizer tore off. Still unable to gain altitude and hard to control, it hit another tree and crashed to the ground, catching fire one mile south of Winwick on the Montgomery farm. Lt. McGarry, 2Lt. Willie C. Cotham, 1Lt. Robert W. Halligan, 1Lt. Kenneth D. Foe, T/Sgt. Henry J. Grace and T/Sgt. Stephen Stuphar were killed in the crash. All of these men, except Lt. McGarry, are buried in Cambridge American Cemetery, England.

1Lt John J. McGarry

S/Sgt. Ira Friedman, S/Sgt. Ervin Hilborn, S/Sgt. Michael A. Vargas and S/Sgt. Walter A. Kowalonek are believed to have been thrown from the aircraft during the crash landing. They were seriously, but not critically, injured with burns and contusions.

Eight other aircraft returned early:

#42-38204 (No Name), 360BS-H (Williams). Assembled with 92BG. Returned when BG turned back.

#42-107048 (No Name), 360BS-M (Eisele) - No. 2 engine trouble.

#42-31669 Shoo Shoo Baby, 358BS-J (Viets) - Runaway propeller.

#42-31739 Pugnacious Peter, 358BS-P (Maxey) - Short of fuel.

#42-97622 Paper Dollie, 358BS-K (Gorman) - Short of fuel.

#42-39785 Thru Hel'en Hiwater, 358-BS-H (Ferguson) - Assembled with 91BG. Returned when BG turned back.

#42-31224 Hell in the Heavens, 358BS-F (Snyder) - Lost formation.

#42-3158 Max, 427BS-Y (Harrison) - Lost formation.

When restricted visibility at Molesworth at take-off made formation assembly difficult, two B-17s joined other Groups. Due to solid cloud cover over the North Sea, four B-17s had to abort. On the bomb run, however, the target could be seen clearly.

Thirty-one aircraft of the two 303rd BG(H) formations dropped 300 M64 500-lb. G.P. bombs from 15,000 (303BG-A) and 17,000 (303BG-B) feet. Aircraft encountered meager and inaccurate flak at Kapellen, Eckenforde, Marienburg, and at the target. Three B-17s sustained minor battle damage and one man was injured. Enemy air opposition was weak – only five to ten enemy aircraft were spotted over the Danish peninsula and in the target area. They made only a few passes at Group aircraft. One aircraft sustained major battle damage. Friendly fighter support was good and as briefed. Chaff had no noticeable effect on the anti-aircraft gunfire.

The mission lasted 11 hours, 38 minutes – the longest yet flown by the 303rd BG(H). Several aircraft landed at alternate airdromes to refuel before returning to Molesworth. General Travis and Lt. Col. Lyle reported that the mission was an outstanding success. Gen. Travis recounted:

The roughest part of the trip was getting together. There was a series of thunderstorms, one after another. When we sighted the enemy coast the weather cleared and it was beautiful from there on to the target and out. We had a little flak going into the Danish coast and I fully expected the German fighters to start after us. Why they didn't, I can't understand, because the weather was so good. We could see the target for miles and our bomb run was perfect. As we turned off the target we could see our bombs land in the target and, I can assure you, our bombing was some better than the first time we went there. We saw each unit follow in and kick it up some more. The first wave flattened it and the rest of the bombs stirred up what was left and stomped it into the ground. It was really beautiful. Coming back, there were a few enemy fighters at the Danish coast, but they didn't come after us. Flak at the target was meager and we didn't suffer any heavy damage from it.

- Lt. Robert J. Lynch (360BS) made a wheels up landing in #42-31754, 427BS-L, at RAF Southrup. He was low on gas and engine was feathered.
- Lt. Col. Lyle said, "Today was one of the very few times that I was able to see the target bombed. It was a real picture to see. The smoke and fire just piled up as each unit's bombs landed right into it. It was undoubtedly one of the best of the 32 I have been on."
- Maj. Shayler was enthusiastic. "Once we got together, it was a beautiful trip," he said. "My Group followed the lead Group over the target and we dumped our bombs right in the middle, on top of theirs. It was as fine a bombing job as I have ever seen."
- S/Sgt. Paul M. Gibbs, ball turret gunner, said, "We got a couple of hangars and some barracks with our bombs. And then the Group behind us came along and got everything that was left. It was perfect--I watched the bombs from one Squadron walk right through one of the hangars." S/Sgt. T.W. Lawson, waist gunner on Fortress Ole George, commented on the lack of enemy fighters: "We saw a lot of airfields in Germany, but there wasn't a plane on them. I guess the Jerries put everything into the air that could fly, so the P-51s wouldn't strafe them. They weren't attacking though. The only two I saw were getting out of the community in a hurry."

From the Journal of Vern L. Moncur, 359th BS Pilot

MISSION #27 Date: April 9, 1944 Target: Marienburg, East Prussia

This was a unique mission in a couple of ways: (1) It was the longest flight we ever made; and (2) This was the only time we ever carried leaflets or "nickels," form of propaganda. We were in the air a little over twelve hours and had to fly through some pretty rough weather right at the start of the trip. We never saw a German fighter, and didn't get any flak until over Denmark on the way home. Then, for a few minutes, it was really a hot ride. Our plane received no serious damage, though we did get a few holes. Nine Fortresses were shot down over Denmark in about nine or ten minutes. We came back the last 150 miles over the North Sea at 400 feet altitude in order to get under the weather. We flew through snow and rain squalls all the time. But as we came farther across England, the weather improved and was all right at the base.

This ride finished the tour of combat for Lt Brooks and S/Sgt Hein. Lt. Cunningham had finished up his tour on the mission before this one, so I had another co-pilot with me, Lt Victor Gorecki. There was no serious battle damage to the plane and no injury to the crew.

This is a copy of the leaflets dropped from "Thunderbird" over Marienburg, East Prussia on April 9, 1944. The leaflets were carried in large bundles which were held together by metal bands. On these bands was an aneroid barometer. The barometer would change as the pressure increased as the bundles fell toward earth. At about 5000 feet, the barometer would break, allowing the bundles to loosen and the leaflets to flutter to the ground individually.

LITERAL TRANSLATION:

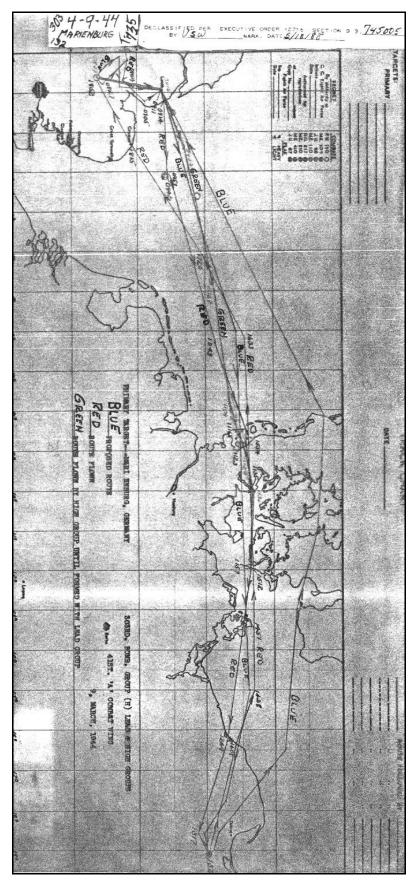

(Top) On February 18, 1943, a few weeks after the catastrophe of Stalingrad, Dr. Goebbels put the question to a mass meeting at the Berlin Sportpalast:

(Large Type) "DO YOU WANT TOTAL WAR?"

An enthusiastic YES was the answer of the Nazi meeting. Today Germany knows what total war means, better than Goebbels and his yes-shouters foresaw. The total war, wanted by the Nazis, will be continued with ever increasing weight and effectiveness, until Germany capitulates unconditionally.

(Beneath Picture) THE GERMAN PEOPLE MUST CHOOSE FOR THEMSELVES:

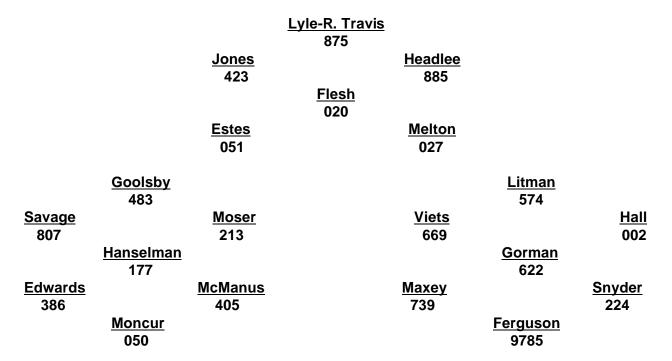

EITHER continuation of the total Nazi-war until final destruction of German man-power and industry. (In The Arrow) OR:

FLYING THE NORTH ATLANTIC

From the book entitled "25 Milk Runs" by Richard R. "Dick" Johnson

We took this brand new B-17, with the radio call letters, "KTEX Mike," which we immediately corrupted into "Kotex Mike," and headed north, behind crews 13, 14 and 15. Alexander's crew, #15, had my best buddy, Horace W. Peppard as its co-pilot. Taking off every thirty minutes, eight bombers left Hunter Field to take the northern route to Europe, across the North Atlantic.

After heading north from Hunter Field on April 6th, we found that we had a brisk tail wind, so we did a lot of sight seeing on the way up the coast. We flew a circle around Norfolk, Virginia, and I was able to pick out my home there. We then flew to Washington, D.C. and flew around the Capitol Building and the Washington Monument, staying at about one thousand feet. We soon found ourselves over New York City and decided to fly around the Statue of Liberty. We were still ahead of schedule, so I suggested to Beiser that we fly around the Empire State Building. Staying at a thousand feet, we flew rather close to the tallest building on Earth at that time. Unfortunately, my suggestion got us in a little hot water. Evidently someone with binoculars could look down and read our tail number as we flew below their level. When we got to England a letter of reprimand was waiting for Beiser. Evidently the authorities in New York were overly sensitive since Yankee Stadium had been recently buzzed by three B-17s during the World Series. These three B-17s eventually found their way to the Group that we would be assigned to. Beiser never held it against me for getting him into this minor bit of trouble.

After six hours we arrived at our destination of Grenier Field, Manchester, New Hampshire, where we spent the night while our plane was refueled and serviced. We spent an extra night and took off on the eighth of April, headed to the town of Happy Valley, Labrador. Our field of departure there was Goose Bay. We arrived at about noon and the ground crews got busy servicing the plane. We were scheduled to take off in the early hours after midnight the next day, April ninth, headed for Keflavijk, near the capitol city of Reykjavik, Iceland. We went to bed early because of this accelerated schedule. We found that bad weather was expected.

As it turned out, the weather was very bad when we were routed out of bed. It was snowing pretty hard, but the operations people said that the flights were on as scheduled since the runway was cleared. We were to take off at thirty minute intervals, go to eleven thousand feet and remain at that altitude for the entire trip.

Crew thirteen took off first and disappeared almost at once. Crew fourteen waited thirty minutes and did the same. Crew fifteen, the one that I had been originally assigned to fly with, started engines and taxied into the take off position. After their allotted thirty minutes they took off into the snow storm and disappeared just as the others had.

We started engines and taxied into position only to be signaled by an Aldis lamp to return to the hard stand. There we found that Crew fifteen carrying my good friend, Aubrey Alexander, with my best buddy, Horace W. Peppard, had crashed just after take off, killing all on board, including the great-grandson of Jim Bowie. Needless to say, we were all pretty shaken up. The inspectors went through our plane with a fine tooth comb, checking to see if sabotage was maybe the cause.

Nothing was found, and we carefully checked the wheel wells to see if some saboteur might have planted a bomb that would explode when the wheels were retracted. We found no hint of trouble, so we taxied back to the take off end of the runway without topping off our gas tanks. By this time the snow was falling more heavily than ever and we decided to do a three-man take off. Beiser would handle the controls and watch the directional gyro while I watched the white stripe down the runway, and Pappy calling off the air speeds. We made it off after an interminable take off roll, being loaded to the gills with gasoline for our eleven hour flight.

Immediately after take off the snow was so heavy that we could barely see the wing tips, and looking straight ahead was like looking into the big end of a white funnel.

We were never to see any sign of the crash site of crew 15 because of the snow, so we flew on to our assigned altitude of eleven thousand feet and stayed there for the entire trip. We found it comforting that the de-icer boots had not been removed from our aircraft, as the snow was just wet enough to form rhyme ice on the wing leading edges. Once in a while we shined a light to see if the ice was a problem, and when it was, we exercised the de-icer boots. These boots consisted of three flat tubes along the entire wing span. When ice formed on the wings, we inflated the center tube and then the two outer tubes, which cracked the ice off and into the slip stream. We also had a bit of trouble with rhyme ice forming on the propellers. We could eliminate this with alcohol de-icer fluid which we could spray from the propeller hub and down each of the three blades. When bits of ice stopped hitting the fuselage we knew the props were clear.

After about six hours into the flight it started to get daylight, and the snow abated a small bit and we could see the wing tips pretty good. But now we started worrying about our position. We had picked up the leg of the four course range out of Iceland, but it was a hundred miles wide at this distance. We knew the wind had been from the northeast, but Gepner couldn't give us a precise fix, because he couldn't see the sun. We knew that we couldn't drift a hundred miles off course without the danger of running out of gas, but to climb above the clouds would use even more gas, so we elected to fly the extra hundred miles if necessary rather than risk an almost certain gas depletion in going to a higher altitude. We flew the entire trip on autopilot, since it could maintain altitude and heading, needing only small corrections with a knob to control elevators, and one for aileron and rudder. Letting "George" do it made it a lot easier on the pilot and co-pilot. Lt. Gepner gave us periodic course corrections so that we would fly a Great Circle Route.

While we were discussing the fuel dilemma, the sun suddenly appeared behind a heavy haze of snow. Lt. Gepner immediately grabbed his sextant and stuck his head up in the astro-dome in front of the cockpit. Beiser and I could see him clicking away on the tape. The sun went behind the overcast almost instantly, but Lt. Gepner soon reported that he thought that he had gotten some decent fixes and that he thought we were about fifteen miles south of course as he had planned. He gave us a course correction which we immediately took, knowing that to follow the range leg at that deviation would take us in an immense curve before reaching the narrow part of the radio signal.

After eleven hours and five minutes, we found the "cone of silence" of the radio station that we were following, and thus knew that we had found the field we were looking for. We had not yet started our let down from the eleven thousand feet, since we had an estimated thirty minutes of fuel left.. We were just about ready to go out to sea a few miles to let down, when suddenly we found a hole in the clouds that was about a mile in diameter, and we could see snow on some mountains. We immediately let down through this opening in a tight descending spiral at minimum air speed, being lightly loaded at this point. We shortly found ourselves in the clear under the clouds which were about four thousand feet above the ground. This is when we started celebrating Easter Sunday, April 9, 1944, which was that day.

Snow was piled twenty feet deep along both sides of the runway and as we approached for landing, we found that we had a fifty miles per hour head wind. This made our touch-down speed of less than forty miles per hour instead of our usual eighty to eighty-five miles per hour. This was fine until we got to the end of the runway and Beiser instructed me to unlock the tail wheel so he could turn off the runway. As soon as I unlocked the tail wheel, Beiser made a left turn onto the taxi-way and had to use a lot of left brake and right engine to keep the nose from turning into the wind which was now fifty miles per hour from the right. We had only gone a few dozen feet when the wind driving against the huge dorsal fin of the B-17 caused the tail wheel pin to shear. This gave us even less control over our desired direction, and almost full left brake and right engine throttle was required to get us to the downwind part of the taxi-way. B-17s always taxied on the two outboard engines. At this point it became fairly easy. Just hold the yoke forward and stand ont he brakes to keep from going too fast. We shut down in the hard stand just before noon on Easter Sunday.

The base maintenance officer and our own crew replaced the tail wheel pin that evening after we all went sight-seeing in the capitol city of Reykjavik.

Iceland didn't have the shortages that one saw in the States. The shop windows had all kind of goods that were being rationed at home. Many sidewalks in the town were line with fish heads a couple of feet deep with paths cut through at doorways. This was their method of refrigerating these fish heads which would be removed before they thawed. I think they were processed into fish oil that was used as a vehicle for paint making as well as many other uses.

That night was my first experience with the Aurora Borealis. It was so cold that I could only stay outside a few minutes at a time, but it was so fascinating that I made many trips out to look. I got hollered at by the guys playing cards for letting in the cold air. These Northern Lights looked as if you were standing at the base of a stage looking up at the bottom edge of the curtain, which was slowly changing color and moving ever so gracefully as if in a fairy light show. The color at the bottom edge of the "curtain" was very bright with the color slowly diminishing as one looked higher, until directly overhead it couldn't be seen at all. The colors undulated from red to green and back again, in a slow waltz across the northern sky.

The next morning, our aircraft having been serviced, we took off for Prestwick, Scotland. We had expected more B-17s to have gone with us, but two others of our group of eight never made it to Iceland. We later learned that one had tried to go above the storm and ran out of fuel as a result. They had come back down and just before running completely out of gas, had ditched alongside a tanker ship. Unfortunately the water was so cold that most were lost to hyperthermia before they could be picked up. This was in the same area of the North Atlantic that had claimed the Titanic, right to this very day, thirty-two years earlier. It was reported that death came in less than twenty minutes to some.

The other lost B-17 had decided to go below the weather when it got daylight, expecting to make an emergency landing on Greenland. They never made it, having to ditch when their fuel ran out. All of these men were lost. Their May Day transmission was the only clue to their position. April 9th was not a good date for that area.

Our flight to Prestwick was uneventful, as the weather got gotten a little better. We were so proud of "our" brand new Flying Fortress that we thought would be ours to fly all our combat missions in just like the "Memphis Belle." No such luck. On April 22, 1944, our plane, "Kotex Mike" with the tail number, 42-102392, built at Boeing's main plant in Seattle, was taken away from us and assigned to the 91st Bomb Group. It started flying combat missions right away and was shot down on its 7th mission on May first, two weeks before we even flew our first mission. That plane, which had been re-named "Cool Papa," received a direct flak burst in the nose and went down in flames with only two survivors. When they took the plane from us we had such short notice that we even left some of our gear on board, including our parachutes, binoculars, and a few personal items that we eventually got back.

For three weeks we dallied at Prestwick, going to school to learn all the latest aircraft recognition. They eagerly showed us pictures of the German Me-262 Jet and the Me-162 Komet, rocket plane. We had seen them all at MacDill Field a couple of months earlier. They schooled us in radar technology, and LORAN, which is an acronym for Long Range Navigation. PFF, or Pathfinder was the British Radar which we often used for bombing through clouds. American airmen called it "Mickey," as in Mouse.

The last week of April found us on a bus headed for the Bomb Group to which we had been assigned. It was the famous 303rd Bomb Group known as "Hell's Angels." As we drove past the little village of Molesworth and turned onto the base which was a little over a mile from that village, we were greeted with some strange sights. There were so many B-17s that they couldn't be easily counted. The 427th Squadron to which we had been assigned was on the base near a runway, while the other three squadrons were a little farther away. As we approached the barrack area of the 427th, some wag had hung a neatly done sign on the first billet area. The sign read, "Girls who visit on a weekend must be off the base by Tuesday." I have tried to find someone who might have a picture of this sign, but to no avail. I don't even know who the artist was.

At last we were at our Base and ready to go into Combat.
