

303rd BG (H) Combat Mission No. 265

1 November 1944

Target: Nordstern Synthetic Oil Refinery at Gelsenkirchen, Germany

Crews Dispatched: 48

Length of Mission: 6 hours, 5 minutes

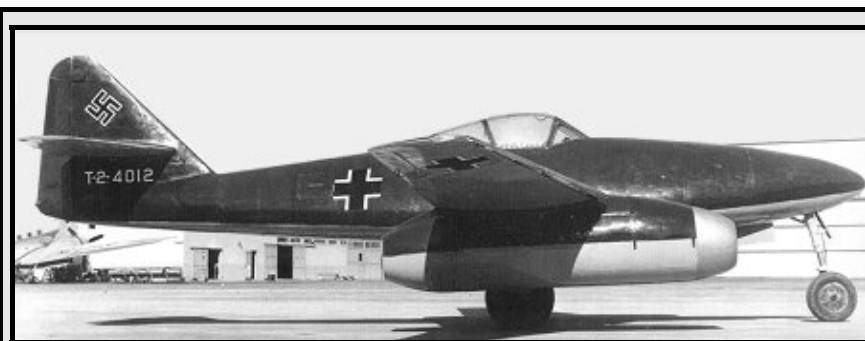

Bomb Load: 20 x 250 lb H.E. M57 bombs

Bombing Altitudes: 28,600, 28,100 & 26,900 ft

Ammo Fired: 5,300 rounds

Thirty-three Fortresses of the lead, low and fourth Squadrons dropped 649 250-lb. H.E. M57 bombs on the primary target at Gelsenkirchen. Bombing was by GEE-H from 28,600, 28,100 and 26,900 feet. Although results were unobserved, crew members were believed to have hit in the city. One aircraft dropped 10 bundles of T184 leaflets. Ten B-17s in the high Squadron bombed the secondary target at Hamm from 27,900 feet, dropping 197 250-lb. bombs via PFF equipment when their GEE-H receivers malfunctioned. Results were unobserved. In the target areas there were 10/10 clouds at 18,000 ft.

A few German jets were reported, but there were no attacks on the 303rd BG(H) formations. Friendly fighter support by 140 P-51s and P-47s was good. Chaff was very effective with the intense, but inaccurate flak at the primary target. A few accurate bursts caused major damage to one and minor damage to another Fortress. Flak at the secondary target was meager to moderate and inaccurate. All aircraft returned to Molesworth and there were no casualties.

The world's first operational jet fighter, the Me-262 Schwalbe, was powered by two Junkers Jumo 004 B turbine engines and had sleekly swept wings and a powerful armament of four 30-mm cannons. With a top speed of approximately 869.4 kph (540 mph), the 262 was 193.2 kph (120 mph) faster than the famed North American Mustang at the same altitude and, although not so maneuverable, was able to engage in, or retire from, combat at will.

Conceived in 1938, the Me 262 was designed by a team led by Dr. Waldemar Voigt. It went through a long gestation period, not making its first flight until April 18, 1941, and then only under the power of a Junkers Jumo 210G piston engine of about 700 horsepower. Jet engine development, although more advanced in Germany than elsewhere, was still in a primitive state, and the turbine engines intended for the sleek fighter were not ready. On July 19, 1942, Flugkapitän Fritz Wendel made the first takeoff under jet power, and from that point on the Me 262 became a ray of hope in the increasingly dark skies of the German Luftwaffe.
