303rd BG (H) Combat Mission No. 266

2 November 1944

Target: Synthetic Oil Refinery at Sterkrade, Germany

Crews Dispatched: 49

Crews Lost: Lt. Davis, 1 KIA, 9 POW Length of Mission: 5 hours, 50 minutes Bomb Load: 20 x 250 lb H.E. M57 bombs

Bombing Altitudes; 28,700, 27,400 & 26,200 ft

Ammo Fired: 1,870 rounds

aptain Robert W. Sheets led his first mission as 427BS Commanding Officer. Sterkrade, always a tough target, responded with all of its anti-aircraft guns. The lead and high Squadrons faced intense flak that damaged 19 B-17s. Five aircraft of the low squadron were damaged and the fourth Squadron escaped unscathed. Chaff appeared to have some benefit. No enemy aircraft were seen and 20 P-47s provided adequate escort.

Weather over Sterkrade consisted of 10/10 low clouds with tops at 10,000 feet that contained a few broken areas. There were no middle or high clouds. Forty-eight formation aircraft dropped 946 250-lb. H.E. M57 bombs from 28,700, 27,800, 27,400 and 26,200 feet. One aircraft dropped 10 leaflet bundles. All GEE-H and PFF equipment operated satisfactorily, but the solid undercast made bomb hit observations impossible.

The deputy lead Fortress #42-97781 The '8' Ball MK III, 359BS piloted by 1Lt. Jack T. Davis, was lost over the target. One engine was hit and the aircraft fell out of formation. When last seen, it was still under control. The crew bailed out at about 500 feet near Arnheim, Netherlands while the B-17 was on auto-pilot. It crashed in a field near Brummen, Netherlands. 2Lt. Donald L. Kohlstedt, 1Lt. Vernon M. Hellesvig, F/O Nino L. Guiciardi, Sgt. Dave Bloom, T/Sgt. Rex E. Lewnfield, Sgt. Richard A. Martin, Sgt. Everette G. Harris and Sgt. Marvin W. Brown were captured and became POWs. Lt. Davis evaded the enemy until 18 November 1944 when he was also captured and held as a POW.

T/Sgt. Alvin G. Bader (HQ) was killed. He is buried in the Netherlands American Cemetery in Martgratten, Netherlands. A memorial to him was erected by citizens of Brummen on 15 November 1995. It was unveiled by Nino L. Guiciardi.

The End of a "Flying Fortress" B-17G #42-97781 The '8' Ball Mk III 359BS (BN-J)

Aboard the "8 Ball"

For Jack Davis and his crew things had gone wrong over the target. 1/Lt Eugene C. Frazier and 2/Lt John R. Lutz, who were flying right behind "the 8 Ball", in "Old Black Magic" and "The Duchess' Granddaughter", respectively, reported upon return at Molesworth that afternoon: "Their number three engine was hit by anti-aircraft gunfire and went out. The propeller was feathered at first, but soon started to windmill. The engine was smoking, but no flames were visible. Then the aircraft lost altitude and was unable to keep up with the formation, but appeared to be under control. "

What happened after the "moderate to intense and fairly accurate" anti-aircraft fire had hit "the 8 Ball" is best told by Nino Guiciardi, the bombardier: "We were hit by flak just a few seconds after I had released the bombs. We were hit in the area of the number three engine and the landing gear The number three engine is the one next to the fuselage on the right side of the plane. The engine was demolished and so was the landing gear. As we continued our flight to try to get back to friendly territory the engine was giving us problems because the pilot could not feather the prop. He couldn't do that because we had also lost the hydraulics to that engine. We had what we called a windmilling prop which is a drag when not powered. After a while the shaft of the engine broke and the prop acted like a fly wheel out of balance. The pilot couldn't give the other engines enough power to maintain altitude because the plane would start to vibrate and cause rivets to pop where the wings were attached to the fuselage. The pilot put the plane into a glide angle just enough to maintain flying speed so that we could go as far as possible to try and get to friendly territory. As we were losing altitude and could not keep up with the group we saw two P-51s that stayed with us to protect us from enemy fighters as far as the vicinity of Arnhem."

Jack Davis and Donald Kohlstedt were working frantically in the cockpit to get their crew back safely. The crew was jettisoning all excess equipment, guns, ammunition, etcetera; in order to lighten the plane and keep it in the air, if not as far as Molesworth, then at least as far as territory occupied by friendly forces. A month and a half ago the Arnhem area had witnessed the grim fight over the Rhine bridge between British and Polish paratroopers and German troops. After the Allied, forces had to withdraw the Germans remained in control north of the Rhine river and, no doubt, Jack Davis wanted to try to get across this river and get as far south as possible, before landing or bailing out. Still, "the 8 Ball" was losing altitude, and was flying at an altitude ranging from 1,000 feet to 3,000 feet according to reports.

The two P-51 "Mustang" fighters escorting "the 8 Ball", mentioned by Nino Guiciardi in his account belonged to the 353rd Fighter Group based at Raydon. The after action report of this Group illustrates what happened: "B-17 going down northeast of Arnhem, Holland. Nine chutes were seen to come out of this aircraft at about 3,000 feet at 1230 hours. Eight chutes opened and one did not."

Indeed, while crossing the IJssel river between Arnhem and Zutphen, Jack Davis had to give the bailout signal to his crew. Probably he had balanced the pros and cons of bailing out or making a belly landing in some Dutch field. However, he chose the first option. The plane kept losing altitude and the crew had to get out fast before the plane was flying too low.

In and Around Brummen

Fifteen year old Bennie Bieleman got the surprise of his life. He lived with his parents in the Zutphensestraat in Rhienderen, a hamlet just north of Brummen. "I saw an airplane approaching, very low. Then I saw a man jump out. The parachute unfolded and the man drifted in my direction. He landed about 150 metres behind our house. Five or six German soldiers who were quartered in our house made up his reception committee. The airman was then escorted away. When the first man landed I saw at least five or six others still in the air."

What had happened aboard the B-17 is described by Rex Lewnfield, the radio-operator: "Our pilot, Jack Davis, gave the crew orders to bail out! We were lined up at the opened hatch in the back of the plane, waiting for this order. Our tail gunner was waiting to jump, but said he wanted to see a chute open before he went out! In the meantime none of the others had made a move to jump. At that moment I yelled 'I am going out' and 'that they had better follow me as we were losing altitude fast'!"

It is, therefore, possible that Lewnfield was the man who Bieleman saw coming down. However, both navigator Hellesvig and bombardier Guiciardi left through their own hatch in the front of the plane. It is not known whether they 'up front' left first and in what sequence the rest of the crew bailed out. It is true that the men came down within hundreds of feet from each other; the time in between their bailing out must have been very, very short.

Diligent research by Jan de Lange from Eerbeek shows that most of the crewmembers came down in a straight line, running from the railway line at Rhienderen, along the Rhienderense straat in the direction of Eerbeek. Seven or eight of the ten crew members left "the 8 Ball" in rapid succession and drifted down into German captivity.

Some events, as recalled by American and Dutch eyewitnesses bear a great similarity. Tail gunner Marvin Brown recalls: "I landed in a school yard with a fence around it. I hit the fence with both knees. I couldn't walk afterwards, so the rest of the crew wheeled me around."

And Dutch eyewitness E.J. Arends: "One of the Americans went through some branches of an apple tree, next to Wolters' farm. He then struck a fence and hurt himself in the process. He could hardly walk. Together with several of his mates he was escorted away by the Germans."

After seven crew members had bailed out, three men were still aboard the plane. They were 'Y-operator Alvin Bader and the two pilots, Donald Kohistedt and Jack Davis.

Arie van der Velde, then six years old, has the following recollection: "I saw a man, standing in an opening in the waist of the plane. I saw him jump out and his parachute didn't open. He came down between Peters' farm at Den Broekweg 1 and a shed. Blood came from his mouth and nose: he was dead!

Another six-year old, Frits Bleumink, lived at the Rhien derense straat, next to the farm where the unfortunate man came down: "The body was brought to the Peters' farm. The man bled from mouth, nose and ears. His boots were taken off and given to Peters. Then a ring, watch, pistol and some papers were taken from his body. In the late afternoon or early evening the body was wrapped in the partly opened parachute and put upon a horse drawn cart and then transported to Brummen."

The unfortunate airman was T/Sgt Alvin G. Bader, who had only joined the crew at the very last moment before departure. Why he fell to his death is unknown. Other crew members suggested that he was afraid to jump and waited too long. He may also have had problems with his parachute. In order to open the parachute a rip cord had to be pulled. At the height from which they were jumping, somewhere between 500 to 1,000 feet, any delay was fatal. Whatever the cause, Alvin Bader was killed. On November 3 he was buried in then Brummen Roman Catholic Cemetery in grave number 17. After the war his remains were transferred to the American Military War Cemetery in Margraten, the Netherlands, where they still rest.

In all, the Germans quickly rounded up eight crew members and found Bader's body. Most of the prisoners were taken to a farm, next to the school, in the center of the hamlet of Oeken. Then they were transported to Zutphen and then again to the German interrogation center at Oberursel near Frankfurt. One man they did not manage to find: Pilot Jack T. Davis.

Jack T. Davis

Davis was the very last one to jump from "the 8 Ball". Copilot Kohlstedt later reported that Davis jumped from an altitude of 500 feet. This meant that his parachute must have opened just in time to break his fall before landing. He will cannot have been in the air for more than a few seconds and this facilitated his escape attempt.

The other advantage he had was that he landed in a wooded area between Brummen and Eerbeek called 'het Leusveld'. In 'het Leusveld' at a farm called 'Turfveen' lived the Dolman family. However, they were not the only occupants. They had a person in hiding there. It was Jaap Bleeker, member of a local underground resistance movement. He recalls: "When I came back from an exercise in the late afternoon I was greeted by Henne Dolman with the words 'I have a surprise for you'. In front of me appeared a strongly built man in a green uniform. It was Jack T. Davis, who had bailed out of his B-17 that afternoon. He had been picked up by Henne Dolman and hidden in the woods. We decided to hide him in a haystack. The Germans were still searching the area. I spent a few days in the haystack with Davis. What is there to talk about with an American who was also a bit reserved by nature? We mainly discussed the American Civil War and the names of the Generals Sherman and Lee were often mentioned. Jack Davis was given the simple food that we all ate, mainly black bread. He never refused to take it, but after he had left we found quite a bit of it in the haystack. He had been too polite to decline, but didn't like it at all. After a few days he was 'put on transport'. Late one evening Henne and Jan Dolman and myself brought him to a crossroads nearby. It was a very tense affair. At the appointed location two or three men were waiting for us. Nothing was said and they left with Jack Davis in the direction of Eerbeek. I had given Jack my best woolen pullover to keep out the chill. "

Davis was brought to Coldenhove, a camping cabin site, just outside Eerbeek, where the resistance group called 'Wolzak' took care of him. There he waited until he could be moved further south, toward the Allied lines.

In these months many Allied soldiers were hiding in the area. Most of them were British paratroopers, who had managed to evade captivity after the battle of Arnhem in September. A first group of these was ferried across the river Rhine during an operation called 'Pegasus I'. This was successful and Davis was to take part in 'Pegasus II' in the night of November 18. Unfortunately, the Germans managed to spoil the effort and Jack Davis was captured by a German patrol, after which he too was transported to Oberursel for interrogation.

The "8 Ball"

After the B-17 had been abandoned by all its crew members, Jack Davis being the last to jump, it continued its flight, guided by the Automatic Flying Control Equipment. The altitude was no more than 500 feet and gradually diminishing. The course led straight to the village of Eerbeek. There some people got the fright of their lives.Mrs. Riek Brouwer- Boezewinkel recalls: "I was standing at the window of our house with an Amhem evacuee, when this colossus came straight at our house. Luckily it hit a birch tree in the meadow, after which it veered away from us. It then crashed. I saw no one come out."

The "8 Ball" had crashed into a meadow at the Voorstondense straat, just short of the Apeldoorn Canal. The Germans were quickly at the scene and guarded the wreckage at first. After they had inspected the interior and removed the remaining machine guns and their ammunition, the wreckage was left to itself. Many civilians visited the location and many pieces were stripped off "the 8 Ball". After the war a scrap metal firm took away the remnants of this once proud B-17.
