

303rd BG (H) Combat Mission No. 347

28 March 1945

Target: Branden-Burgische Motorenwerke at Berlin/Spandau

Crews Dispatched: 40

Crews Lost: Lt. Fredrickson - 1 KIA

Crewmembers Lost or Wounded: Lt. Wokersien & Sgt Bovey, KIA: 2 wounded

Length of Mission: 9 hours, 41 minutes

Bomb Load: 6 x 500 lb H.E. M43 & 4 x 500 lb Incendiary bombs

Bombing Altitudes: 26,500, 25,500, & 27,300 ft

Ammo Fired: 0 rounds

A deep penetration mission to Berlin/Spandau, Germany, to bomb the Branden-Burgische Motorenwerke was the 303rd BG(H) first priority (visual) and second priority (H2X) target. The third priority targets were targets of opportunity at Stendal marshalling yard, Gardelegan Airfield, or other airfields in a designated area. There were no early returns.

Thirty-seven Fortresses dropped 213 500-lb. H.E. M43, 144 500-lb. incendiary bombs, and 10 units of leaflets on the first priority target in Berlin. The target was covered by a 10/10 undercast and adverse weather conditions with layered clouds were encountered from Belgium back to Molesworth on the return route. There was no enemy air opposition and friendly fighter support by 245 P-51s was good. Flak was meager and accurate at the target and at Brandenburg and Stendal. Six aircraft had major battle damage and 13, minor damage.

Captain Arnold Mosel, Low Squadron Lead Pilot, left the formation 30 minutes after leaving the target. He feathered the #3 and #4 engines of #44-8439, 360BS with gas for the #1 and #2 engines almost nil. Landing was made at the 416BG airfield #A-69 at Laon/Athies, France. He returned to Molesworth on 29 March. The Squadron lead was taken over by 1Lt. Jack W. Weaver.

Two aircraft failed to assemble and bombed with the 3rd AD on a target in the Hannover area. One of them, B-17G #43-38248 Jigger Rooche II, piloted by 2Lt. Carl A. Fredrickson, was lost from the formation under adverse weather conditions. Just after "bombs away," the lead aircraft made a right turn off the target and Jigger Rooche II was not spotted again. F/O Harold W. Goetz reported that his aircraft was hit by flak on its underside, severing some of the control cables. The pilot, engineer, and navigator were wounded and the crew elected to remain with the aircraft. With three engines out and applying full rudder and heavy aileron control, the co-pilot was able to find a small clearing in an area near the Oder River in Poland to make a crash landing. The wings were sheared off and, by some miracle, the fuselage snaked through the trees and avoided any head-on collision with the terrain or trees. Sgt. Harry G. Stube died from his wounds. Lt. Fredrickson and F/O Arthur L. Herman had their wounds treated by Russian doctors. All survivors became guests of the Russians. They finally managed to join up with friendly troops in June and were returned to American lines.

Sgt Charles D. Bovey

The bad weather on the return route, together with gas shortages, caused nine aircraft to land on the Continent and eight to land at other airdromes or to crash-land in the UK. Sgt. Charles D. Bovey, ball turret gunner on #43-37590, Neva-The Silver Lady, 358BS, piloted by 2Lt. Harry E. Nester, bailed out over the English Channel at 1438 hours on the return route. The reason for his bailout was not known. He had a parachute on when he jumped from the aircraft, but with the heavy cloud conditions, crewmen were unable to see if his parachute opened. Dinghies were thrown from the aircraft and Air-Sea Rescue was notified. The RAF 11 Group sent two rescue vessels to search for Sgt. Bovey. He is listed on the Wall of the Missing at Cambridge.

Cambridge American Cemetery Wall of Missing

On the wall running from the entrance to the chapel are inscribed the names of 5,126 Americans who gave their lives in the service of their country, but whose remains were never recovered or identified.

The returning aircraft carried one officer who was killed, one seriously wounded, and one crewman wounded — all due to flak. F/O James T. Wokersien, co-pilot on #43-38958 Green Hill Belle, 427BS, piloted by 2Lt. Lloyd L. Flanigan, was killed by flak fragments to the chest about two minutes before the target. Lt. Flanigan landed the aircraft at Airfield #89. F/O Wokersien was taken to British General Hospital 101 situated at Louvain. British medics stated he had been dead for a long time.

F/O James Wokersien

Two aircraft crash-landed in England. One was #43-38451 (No Name), 360BS (1Lt. Robert E. Edmunds). The pilot calculated that only 40 minutes fuel remained upon reaching the English coast. He was instructed to land at the Manston Emergency Airfield, but Manston weather was very restricted. The pilot heard over his VHF that the Splasher No. 8 area was clear. Upon reaching this area, weather had "dropped to the ground." A wheels-up landing on the beach near Rye Harbour damaged the ball and chin turrets. No crew members were injured and the B-17 was salvaged.

The second to crash-land in England was #42-97281 Queenie, 427BS (2Lt. Forrest E. Miller). The aircraft left the formation over France when two engines were running rough. The No. 2 engine was feathered. The navigator's "G" box and radio compass became inoperative and Lt. Miller dropped to 500 ft. to search for an airfield and crash-landed wheels-up in a pasture near Sandwich, in southeast England. There were no crew injuries and the aircraft was salvaged.
