

427th Bombardment Squadron

303rd Bombardment Group (H)

Molesworth, England

1942-1945

The 427th Bombardment Squadron was originally the 38th Reconnaissance Squadron. They were sailing to Hawaii to join its parent, the 19th Bomb Group, when the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor on the 7th of December 1941. The ship carrying the 38th Reconnaissance Squadron returned to the mainland and the personnel were assigned to the 427th Bomb Squadron. The 427th BS became famous with its parent, the 303rd Bombardment Group (H). Because of its initial move in the Pacific, 427th Squadron members are entitled to wear the Asia-Pacific Campaign ribbon.

The Squadron brought nine B-17 aircraft from the United States and arrived at Molesworth, England with the following: S for Sugar, Susfu, Kali, Memphis Tot, Joe Btfspk, Jerry Jinx, Bad Check and two aircraft with no names. The Squadron Commander, Major Charles C. Sheridan was aboard S for Sugar, that went on to almost a record of 50 missions, but got shot down on her 49th. Major Sheridan was the only Squadron or Group Commander of the 303rd Bombardment Group to be lost during the entire war. He was shot down on 3 January 1943 while leading his Squadron on a mission to St. Nazaire, France in #41-24517 Kali. Also lost on this mission was another 427th B-17, 41-24620 Snap! Crackle! Pop!

Members of the Ground Echelon had the same kinds of problems as other operating Squadrons in getting set-up and running smoothly at Molesworth. Much of their equipment and personal items were delayed in arriving, and the men were struggling with the different manner in which the British were operating.

Upon the loss of Major Sheridan, Captain Glenn E. Hagenbuch was named as the Squadron's new Commanding Officer, and continued to serve in that position until he was sent on a special mission to North Africa and upon his return was transferred to VIII Bomber Command. He was replaced by Major Edgar E. Snyder, Jr on 13 July 1943. Word was received that Major Hagenbuch was killed in a P-40 crash while flying in England. Lt. Col. Snyder served until 1 November 1944, when he was named as Deputy Commanding Officer of the 303rd Bombardment Group. Major Robert W. Sheets was appointed as the Squadron Commander upon the departure of Lt. Col. Snyder.

During the early days of the war, the Bomb Squadrons took turns "standing down" which gave the maintenance section an opportunity to catch up on the work of keeping their aircraft airworthy. All but two of its original aircraft were gone by the 32nd mission flown by the Group, with Bad Check and S for Sugar competing for honors of being the first B-17 to complete 50 missions.

Organizationally, the 427th Bombardment Squadron was similar to the other three Bombardment Squadrons. It had the normal S-1 (Personnel); S-2 (Intelligence); S-3 (Operations); and S-4 (Maintenance & Supply). Supporting sections included the Adjutant, Communications, Armament, Chemical, Ordnance and Utilities, etc.

All around the clock, the Ground Support Echelons of the Bomb Squadrons were hard pressed to ensure that their aircraft and flight crews were ready to take off and destroy enemy targets. Some relief was possible when they saw the last of their B-17s lift off on their way to their target. But that was only temporary, as they knew that they had to get back to doing the things that would allow the Squadron to put another formation of B-17s in the air the following morning.

Everyone at Molesworth was dedicated to the success of the mission, and all personnel serving in the Ground Support Echelon set high standards to make sure that all the required tasks were performed in a timely manner.

The number of personnel assigned to the 427th increased as the squadron received more crews and aircraft. Starting out with only eight crews and aircraft, the squadron grew until there were over 30 B-17s and crews assigned at one time. Of course, that necessitated an increase in the number of ground support personnel to support this increased workload.

All of the men listed above, as well as others listed in our Index of Support Personnel, were responsible for everything that happened in the 427th Bombardment Squadron in carrying out their mission of getting their flying crews in the air. They housed them, fed them, transported them, advised them, provided them with guns and bombs and flyable aircraft on many of the most dangerous missions flown by the 303rd Bomb Group.
